They claim that all oil sold in the city is gauged.

The office of gauger is an adjunct to s the municipal government, and he is responsible to the chief of the department of public safety. This is not Mr. Stevens' fight. It is a question that interests the city of Pittsburgh. The city attorney was consulted and agreed to bringing the suit against the Globe people. Pittsburgh only got something like $7,600 last year as its share of the receipts for gauging, and if the city is being euchered out of a large sum yearly it is time for some action to be "The case of a man named Shriver, a wholesale grocer in Ohio, is similar. The city claimed that all goods sold by the firm's agents in or out of the city were taxable. The case was taken to court and the city was sustained. Another case in point was that of Joseph Fleming for selling goods outside of the county. The court decided that the goods were sold when they left his hands.

"The question now is how the senate will treat the bill, and as I have stated it is a matter of great moment to Pittsburghers. The bill was created to protest the public and should be retained and the refining companing caused to live up to its provisions."
